

GACS — Global Anti-Crime & Safety

Government & Public-Figure Online Protection — One-Page Brief

The problem

Impersonation accounts copy the names, photos and titles of elected officials, ministers and public figures, then contact citizens, journalists and donors with fake announcements, charity appeals and investment offers. The result is direct financial harm to the public and lasting damage to the official's credibility and to trust in government communications.

What GACS does

- Continuous monitoring for impersonator accounts and lookalike profiles across major social platforms.
- Public verification pages so citizens and media can confirm which accounts and messages are genuine.
- Evidence packs for takedowns: screenshots, timestamps and account history, formatted for platform reports and legal counsel.
- A public scam registry used to check links, phone numbers, emails, wallets and websites before money or data is sent.
- Free fraud-awareness courses with verifiable certificates for staff training.

Government & institutional program

- Free 30-day trial, started online in minutes: no charge for 30 days, cancel any time before the trial ends.
- Two office sizes: up to 10 protected officials ($499/month after the trial) or up to 25 protected officials ($999/month after the trial).
- Priority review of reported impersonators targeting public officials.
- Staff training packs: team certification seats for fraud-awareness and OSINT courses, with a manager view of completion.
- Deployment is read-only and privacy-respecting: GACS monitors public profiles and reports; it does not require account passwords.
- Offices that require an invoice or purchase order can arrange one by email instead of the online trial.

Why now

Impersonation scams are among the fastest-reported fraud categories to consumer-protection agencies worldwide. Public figures are high-value targets because a single convincing fake account can reach thousands of constituents in hours.
